

ABSTRACT

The aim of research to analyze the relation CAR, NPLs, ROA, LDR, cash ratio and size of the company to profitability in the corporate banking sector in BEI. The research period of the year 2012 - 2014 in the bank at the Indonesia Stock Exchange, using the technique purposive sample obtained 18 banks on the Stock Exchange as a sample by taking some of the criteria that the sample be homogeneous wherein the determination of the criteria in this research are: bank listing in BEI from 2012 - 2014.

The presentation of the data using the method of data pooled (years 2012-2014) so that the number of data (n) acquired as many as 54 data. Data were analyzed using multiple linear regression.

The results showed that the capital (CAR) has positive and significant correlation between the profitability, NPL (Net-performing loans) had no significant effect on profitability, ratio BOPO had significantly on profitability, loan to deposit ratio (LDR) had no significant effect on profitability, cash ratio against no significant effect on the profitability and size of enterprises have a significant effect on profitability.

Keywords: audit opinion, the weakness of the internal control system, adherence to legislation and the level of local government integrity.