

ABSTRAC

Technological developments from the impact of globalization is so rapid now accompanied with the development of technology-based information systems. Along with the development of information technology, every organization now considers that the information system is essential to the survival of the company. Information Systems can be defined as a set of formal procedures in which the data are collected, processed into information, and distributed to users. Development of Information Systems are intimately associated with the operational accounting useful for every organization.

The purpose of this study is to obtain empirical evidence of the influence performance expectation, effort expectancy, social influence to intention of Information System partially, to obtain empirical evidence of the influence of the conditions that facilitate the use of Information System, to obtain empirical evidence with the intention of using Information System, to obtain evidence empirical use of Information System with individual performance. The study population was all employees of PT. Pertamina (Persero) UPMS IV, while the sample 149 respondents drawn by purposive sampling technique. Type of data used primary data collection using questionnaire method.

In this research, there were six hypotheses that have been processed using the Partial Least Square (PLS). Consists of three accepted hypothesis that a positive relationship between social influences on interest in the use of Information System, the conditions that facilitate the use of Information System and usage Information System on individual performance. Three hypotheses were rejected while the absence of a positive relationship between effort expectancy with intention of Information System, expectations of the business with the intention of Information System and intention of Information System on the use of Information System.

Keywords : Intention of Information System, Information System Usage, Individual Performance, UTAUT.